MI6 CONFIDENTIAL – LEARNING FROM THE MASTERS ISSUE #47 OUT NOW

(London, UK, October 25th 2017) MI6 Confidential, the full-colour magazine celebrating the world of James Bond 007, returns with its forty-seventh issue.

Diamonds Are Forever is a unique entry in the series for many reasons, perhaps most notably as it is the only film to be book-ended by two different James Bond actors. It was an unstable time for the franchise, and despite Sean Connery thinking the film had one of the best scripts (his opinion may have been swayed by the record payday he was to receive), it had a particularly nasty tone throughout that would not be seen again until Licence To Kill some 18 years later.

In this issue, the henchman and heavies of Diamonds reflect on their time with Connery and fond memories of filming. We also go behind the scenes with the latest, collectible Bond figures, dive into the 'Casino Royale' graphic novel from Dynamite, and celebrate the opening of 007 Elements at the peak of Gaislachkogel Mountain in Sölden.

Featured in this issue:

- Learning From The Masters - Putter Smith and Bruce Glover reminisce
- I Got A Brotha - Slumber Inc's Sid Haig in conversation
- A Glowing Tribute - Michael Valente remembers his first screen role
- Diamond Gallery - Curious and rare behind the scenes photos
- Scratching The Surface - The men behind the new Casino Royale graphic novel
- The Bond Connection - Christopher McQuarrie talks Mission: Impossible
